CROW CAN TALK

Ornithologist Woods, of the Smithsonian Institution, is back in Washington after an absence of four weeks, and, in consequence, "Jack," Mr. Woods's pet crow and champion talking bird of the district, is in a high state of jubilation.

Jack spent the interim during his master's absence with a family in the northeastern part of the city. But he has not received any advances of friendship made to him, indulged in few or no remarks, and, in fact, sulked and drooped all the time. But as soon as he heard Mr. Woods's voice at the front door of the house, Jack's entire demeanor became metamorphosed. His drooping feathers became again erect and sleek, his beady black eyes glistened, he sprang to the bars of his cage and manifested every sign of laboring under the most intense excitement.

"Hello, Jack! Hullo Woods! hullo! hullo, hullo! ha! ha! ha!" were his exclamations as he danced around the cage in an ecstasy of enjoyment and expectation

At sight of his master Jack's gladness and hilarity knew no bounds. Mr. SSALINH Woods had to take him out of his cage. "I wouldn't give that bird," exclaimed Jack's delighted owner, "for $100,

This faculty in the man is, of course, more remarkable than it is in the crow, the organs of whose throat, like those of parrots and other talking birds, are especially adapted by nature for this purpose. Mr. Woods will tell you that when he was a boy in a farm.

"It simply came naturally to me," he says, "and I thought nothing at all about there being anything extraorlinary in it until I came to a city, and then those who heard me give the various notes and calls expressed themselves much astonished, especially when they observed, as some had an oppor- Labor Account$17,239.32 tunity of doing, that the birds imitated Less labor paid for responded to the sounds. There is a world of truth in the dictum attributed to Gladstone that nothing except the MINT can make money without advertising. All the same, some folks may imagine that advertising is an expense which must be borne by customers.

But no inference could be more fallacious.

Paradoxical though it be, we would be unable to sell at our well-known close margins were it not for the large sums we spend
